RAIL PLAN STATED BY MR. CUMMINS

Senator Believes Return to Private Ownership Is Need of Service.

roads into fifteen or twenty great competitive systems, to be supervised by Uncle Sam and administered by private corporations, was advocated by Senator Cummins of Iowa, new chairman of the Senate interstate commerce committee, speaking this morning before the convention of the American Short Line Railroad Associa-tion at the Willard.

Discretion and Judgment Needed. Senator Cummins, although firm in its expressed conviction that transportation is as much a governmental function as is proper police protection, declared he was not in favor of government operation. When the government comes to select the instrumentality by which it may supervise the nation's transportation, the senotor said it must use wise discontinuous. vise the nation's transportation, the senator said, it must use wise discretion and sound judgment, and both these qualities demand that the roads be remitted to private corporations, which can render the service desired far better than can the federal authorities eral authorities.

"There are insuperable obstacles to direct governmental operation," he concluded, "no matter how efficient, patriotic and conscientious a director general of railroads might be."

Senator Cummins recommended that the fifteen or twenty great privately operated systems he considered essential should be under governmental guarantee of a certain return. This rate of return should be the same as hat on governmental obligations, with an additional return based on with an additional return based on the efficiency and good management of the roads. He pointed out the great discrepancies in the rates of re-turn of the different roads for the three-year period ended June 30, 1917, and said there is no way other than through the consolidation plan whereby the Interstate Commerce Commis-sion can fix rates on which some roads can exist without lifting the richer roads to an affluence intoler-able to the country.

Would Uphold Constitution.

Senator Ellison Du Rant Smith of South Carolina, the first speaker South Carolina, the first speaker this morning, set forth the startling economic and political situation with which the world is confronted through the evolutions of the world war, and urged his audience, as American citizens, to stand by the Constitution and by old-fashioned democracy.

No further speeches are scheduled. The convention is occupied this afternoon, the last scheduled session, with business, including reports of committees, among the most important being those of the resolutions, nominations and finance committees. It is confidently expected that Bird M. Robinson, president, and his fellow executives will be continued in office.
